

'Universal' means 'everything, everywhere' and 'Osmosis' means 'absorbed into it', so 'Universal Osmosis' means,

'Absorbed into everything, everywhere'.

When everything seems separate, then how can this be so? The answer to this is because we are generally only looking at the surface of it.

We know that all material is made up of a bunch of vibrating atoms with further inner components, holding the bond of material together until the time comes for those bonds to break down. So how can we say that an outer material solid shape of form is its only existing aspect when we know that there's much more to it than that.

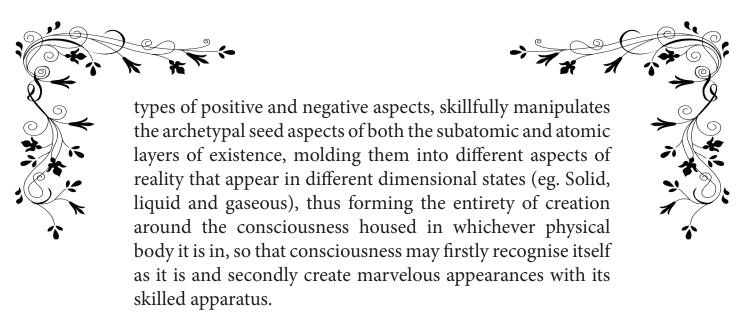

At the outside most layer, we sense a gross material universe, a slow energetic movement that allows us time to pick up the vibration and interpret it into a solid picture. But this seemingly solid space is made up of atoms, and these atoms, like little universes of their own, are mostly made up of space.

Indeed, it has been said that if all the space were taken out of every atom that makes up the material forming the Empire State Building in New York, then there would be no more than the size of a bag of sugar of gross material substance left behind, with an unbelievably heavy mass.

Pure consciousness pervades all these dimensional spaces as it IS that space and through the process of the dance of the five elements that exist within consciousness as different

It has been suggested that just like in holographic theory, our brain processes information as electrical communications that take place between neurons - the brain's nerve cells. These wave-like patterns are projected through neurons that have tree-like branches that transmit the encoded patterns. This process creates a plethora of interference waves that are subsequently translated by the visual apparatus of our optic system, and are interpreted as manifest reality, hence waves (electrical communications in the brain) and particles (archetypal atoms of manifest reality) exist simultaneously.

Having the tools to understand how to live life more successfully and happily in a more balanced world environment through awareness of how to conduct the orchestra of appearance within one's mental faculties, one may employ an entirely different strategy of play and hence result to the game of life.
